

Three players. One court. The same coach every session.

You know me. You know Henry. Here is how this works.

Morning light on the court. The sound of the ball off a clean strike. Ocean breeze ten minutes from the water. The Pod is private player management built around a small, fixed group of serious juniors who train together, every day, with the same coach.

The structure.

CONFIGURATION

Two configurations. A 3-player Pod has two paying families plus Henry. A 4-player Pod has three. The number is fixed; there is no twentieth student waiting for a slot to open. The annual commitment is what makes the year-long planning possible — periodization, tournament selection, travel coaching, and the calls we take when something needs to be talked through outside a session.

One tuition covers everything: on-court training three to five days per week, individual development plans, tournament programming, travel coaching when families travel, and the standing availability you'd expect from a coach who knows your child by name. It is a year-long program commitment, not a per-session fee.

The team behind it.

COACH + LINEAGE

Andrew runs every Pod session personally. Twenty years coaching internationally and on tour. Took Karue Sell from ATP #860 to #258 in 2025. Trained Colton Smith (#133), Max McKennon (#458), Ryan Seggerman (#63 in doubles). Alex Michelsen came through the program at ages 12–13 and is now ATP #30.

D1 pipeline. Sean Daryabeigi (USC, Blue Chip #2) · Rebecca Lynn (Yale) · Lauren Stein (Cornell).

Henry Mateljan

IN THE POD SINCE 2024 · AGE 9

UTR 2.48 > 4.60

Eighteen months. Currently in the 4.60–5.00 band. One son, one verifiable line.

Pod placement is by invitation. If this sounds like the right next step for your player, write to Andrew directly. He reads and replies to every Pod inquiry personally.
